Who can wonder that the Filipinos have been waging war against Uncle Sam to prevent him from thrusting upon them a "higher civilization," after the recent revelations concerning the barbarity indulged in by some of the American soldiers? One or two applications of the "water cure" would make a rebel out of almost anybody.

Henry Watterson sounds a keynote for the Democratic policy for 1904 in these words: "Opposition to absolutism and arbitrary power will constitute the fighting line—one God, one Constitution and one flag, against military despotism and the man on horseback." David B. Hill's slogan for the next campaign is a union of the two factions of that party by the mutual ignorance of the silver question. But, unless the Republicans do something in the way of tariff revision, the chances are that the battle of 1904 will be fought out on the old reliable tariff question. The history of the past reveals the fact that the people are in favor of a reasonable tariff, but are just as much opposed to an unreasonably high protection wall.

The following from the Kansas City Journal suggests the ideal relations which ought to exist between the newspaper and its readers. That is, a willingness on the part of both to exercise that magnanimity of spirit by which they can continue in friendly relations and at the same time differ in their opinions in regard to some matters of public policy:

"A subscriber at Aurora, Mo., writes that he thinks a great deal of The Journal, but that he cannot agree with it in regard to the merits of oleomargarine, St. Clay Bros and concessions to Cuba. Which is all right and proper. The Journal likes to have the sympathy of its readers, but it cannot expect to please all of them in every position it takes. Many who like its treatment of the subjects above mentioned doubtless disagree with it in other particulars. We cannot all see alike on all questions, and perhaps it is better that we should not, for in that case we might frequently all be mistaken. The Journal is conscientious in its policies and does not doubt that its Aurora friend is equally so."

Departure of Tomas Estrada Palma, From the New York Evening Sun.

This morning a little old man left an obscure village in Orange county, where he had taught school and made his home for eighteen years, to assume the duties of president of Cuba. No great man saw him off and bade him be of good cheer and strong in hope. But his neighbors turned out to the last child who could walk. First came the village band, then the school children, next the fire department, and a body of townsmen brought up the rear. All carried Cuban flags. "I leave part of my heart behind me," said Tomas Estrada Palma, when he had to say goodbye. "We were so taken up with a friend," said a villager, "that we almost neglected to notice that in our neighbor we had among us the president of a sister republic." It was the farewell which the little old man would have chosen, if he had had any choice; and it is a sign of promise for Cuba that her people have called to the head of their government a man so simple, modest and sensible.

Twenty-five years ago Tomas Estrada Palma made a resolution that he would never set foot in Cuba until she was released from the yoke of Spain. When he landed at Jibara next Sunday morning it will be his first visit since the yoke was made. A man of mold less heroic would have hastened to Havana when the Spanish flag came down from Morro castle and in speech and manner he would have shown his devotion. But perhaps discerning that his countrymen might desire to call him to the presidency, he had a good taste to defer the day of greeting. Now on his return, he does not go in state to Havana, but repairs to Bayamo, his birthplace, as to a place of pilgrimage. Out of Bayamo he went in 1868 to set up the standard of revolt. He will appear on its streets again, an old and worn man, but the chosen president of a free people. Palma is one of those men who have not lived in vain. The simplicity of the man makes him admirable.

Better Than Pills.

The question has been asked, "In what way are Chamberlain's Stomach & Liver Tablets superior to pills?" Our answer is: They are easier and more pleasant to take, more mild and gentle in effect and more reliable as they can always be depended upon. Then they cleanse and invigorate the stomach and leave the bowels in a natural condition, while pills are more harsh in effect and their use is often followed by constipation. A. M. CRANDALL.

"A neighbor ran in with a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy when my son was suffering with severe cramps and was given up as beyond hope by my regular physician, who stands high in his profession. After administering three doses of it, my son regained consciousness and recovered entirely within twenty-four hours," says Mrs. Mary Haller, of Mt. Crawford, Va. This Remedy is for sale by Webb Drug & Hardware Co.

Wood For Rheumatism.

Last fall I was taken with a very severe attack of muscular rheumatism, which caused me great pain and annoyance. After trying several prescription and rheumatic cures, I decided to use Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which I had seen advertised in the South Jerseyman. After two applications of this Remedy I was much better, and after using one bottle, was completely cured.—SALLIE HARRIS, Salem, N. Y. For sale by Webb Drug & Hardware Co.

Farm Topics.

HANDY STABLE GRANARY.

It Is Not Only Useful as a Labor Saver, But Also Keeps the Grain in Fine Condition.

My grain bins have a raised bottom, as portrayed, elevated at back and side, so the grain will slide to outlet spouts, a, a, which have a sliding valve to raise when grain is wanted. The spouts should be high enough from floor for a one-half bushel measure to set under, or where large quantities of grain are handled, for bags. Bins are filled from top at door, which has a tight fitting lid. Grain elevated on a platform by a wheelbarrow from wagon. Every time any grain is taken out, the grain in bin is stirred or aired, thereby drying out damp grain.—W. A. Sharp, In Farm and Home.

THE SHEEP'S FEET.

If They Are Properly and Systematically Cared For, Lameness Will Occur Rarely.

It seems hard to understand why it never occurs to many shepherds to trim the feet of the home flock. But more than this, some even enter the show ring with the two divisions of the foot curled and the outer one usually turned up as if it were searching for a support on which to climb. Such a sheep can hardly walk, and when let loose in the show ring, waddles around as if its legs were useless for the purposes of locomotion. During the summer, especially if pastured on hilly and gravelly ground, the feet may not need attention, but before the flock goes into winter quarters, and again at shearing time the feet want looking after, says the Homestead. Usually thorough trimming at shearing time is sufficient, but the flockmaster, by watching, should know how often, and when he should attend to the feet of his own flock. Varieties differ a great deal; usually the fine woolled sorts grow horn much more rapidly than the others. If the foot is not attended to and the breeding flock goes into winter quarters with the hoof too long, it soon begins to double over and imprison filth and dirt, and the top growing inordinately begins to turn upwards. After a time the sheep goes lame because of the filth and irritation, thus furnishing the most suitable conditions for foot rot to develop.

In paring the feet the toe should be cut off at a point where the natural toe seems to stop. The toes are seldom shortened too much. Of course if cut too closely some bleeding may result, and while this is not serious, it is needless pain to the sheep. In removing the double sides pare these close to the natural pad of the foot and clean out all filth or accumulations. If it is filled with matter or suppurated, clean it out thoroughly and dress it with a saturated solution of copper, sulphate or blue stone. If chalk or some other harmless substance is mixed with this it gives it body and the application is retained better. During the winter season, when the sheep are more confined and the conditions are very unfavorable for rapid hoof growth, the feet are very likely to require attention, if they have not been cared for previously.

Asches and Salt for Hogs.

My hogs get all the wood ashes, coal ashes, soft coal or hard coal they will devour, and fattening hogs when confined will eat a good deal. I believe the ashes or coal supply a need, keep the animals flourishing and tend to prevent worms and cholera. I formerly got coal slittings from the coal yards, but I have substituted soft coal ashes from the creamery furnace in addition to wood ashes from the house. It is amusing to see the swine stand around the ash pits eating ashes and hunting for the bits of coal, crunching them with much seeming delight. As to salt, my hogs never seemed to care for it, though I give them all they want, putting it in a separate place so as not to compel the hogs to eat what they do not want in order to get what they do want.—Breeder's Gazette.

Silage for Ewes and Lambs.

We have never had a silo. Having always a great abundance of alfalfa or clover hay, we have not needed it much, says Joseph E. Wing in Breeder's Gazette. Yet such shepherds as H. H. Miller and H. P. Miller, both famous lambsgrowers, use silos. H. P. Miller declares good silage a great aid in keeping up the milk flow of the ewes. There is no doubt that the ewe needs about the same ration as the dairy cow while she is suckling her lamb. I would suggest that the silage be made so as to be sweet, fearing that much acidity in it would harm the lambs through the milk. That means that the corn should get fairly matured before being put into the silo.

Points of a Good Sheep.

Lots of bone, large, strong joints and a flat rather than a round, pipe-stem leg are the things to insist upon, says Wool Markets and Sheep. The belly and back line should both be straight, the back broad and the skin bright red, though dark and even lighter skinned rams are sometimes very vigorous. This is not the rule, however.

A Doctor's Bad Plight.

"Two years ago, as a result of a severe cold, I lost my voice," writes Dr. M. L. Scarbrough, of Hebron, Ohio, "then began an obstinate cough. Every remedy known to me as a practicing physician for 35 years, failed, and I daily grew worse. Being urged to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, I found quick relief and for last ten days have felt better than for two years." Gentlemen:—Being entirely cured of deafness, thanks to your treatment, I will now give you a full history of my case, to be used at your discretion.

About five years ago my right ear began to ring, and this kept on getting worse, until I lost my hearing in this ear entirely.

I underwent a treatment for catarrh, for three months, without any success, consulted a number of physicians, among others, the most eminent ear specialists of this city, who told me that only an operation could help me, and even that only temporarily, that the head noises would then cease, but the hearing in the affected ear would be lost forever.

I then saw your advertisement, accidentally in a New York paper, and ordered your treatment. After I had used it only a few days according to your directions, the noises ceased, and to-day, after five weeks, my hearing in the diseased ear has been entirely restored. I thank you heartily and beg to remain Very truly yours,

F. A. WERMAN, 730 B. Broadway, Baltimore, Md.
